ANT—Attachment Narrative Therapy: Narrative and Attachment Theory Approaches in Systemic Family Therapy with Eating Disorders

Rudi Dallos

ABSTRACT. The paper proposes that recent developments in attachment theory, especially the move to the study of representations, offer some helpful new directions for systemic family therapy. Some of the findings of a close association between early attachment experiences and the coherence of the narratives are reviewed. It is suggested that this offers a useful link for systemic approaches in showing how early interactions in families not only promote particular emotional attachment patterns, but also shape the content and style of the narratives that are formed. These implications are then explored in the context of work with anorexia nervosa. It is suggested that commonly observed patterns, such as avoidance of conflict and apparent difficulties in discussing relationships and feelings, are consistent with trans-generational experiences of insecure/avoidant attachments. Some implications for systemic therapy with families are outlined and illustrative case study is offered. *[Article copies available for a fee from The Haworth Document Delivery Service: 1-800-342-9678.
