TIPS | for Educators of ELLs in Grades 4-6: Reading

The tips below offer some great ways to help your English language learners (ELLs) become confident and successful readers. Add a new language strategy each week, and watch your students' reading improve!

Note: These tips can be used with both newcomer and long-term ELLs. Newcomer ELLs are students who have just arrived in the United States. Long-term ELLs are students who have been in the United States for a longer period of time.

- Increase exposure to language by reading to students every day.
Choose texts with lots of illustrations and frequently used words. To provide extra scaffolding, choose books with simple sentence structures, repetitive phrases and predictable plots.
- Reread familiar texts.
Rereading familiar texts is one of the best ways to improve reading accuracy and fluency. Rereading also helps ELLs develop vocabulary by providing repeated exposure to the same words in context.
- Provide explicit, systematic instruction in phonics.
To become successful readers in English, students need explicit instruction in sound-symbol correspondences. Make phonics instruction part of a balanced program that includes reading meaningful texts that are aligned to the content being taught in the classroom.
- Help students recognize the structure of expository text.
Introduce the various parts of the text, such as the table of contents and the glossary. Show students how the text is organized by pointing out bold print, chapter headings and chapter summaries.
- Build or access prior knowledge before reading.
Set the stage for reading by helping ELLs build background knowledge and make connections to their own experiences.
- Ask open-ended questions.
Asking questions that require more than a "yes" or "no" answer helps students organize their thoughts in English and fosters English language proficiency. It's also a great way to check reading comprehension. Ask students for evidence of the answer, and ask other students if they agree or disagree.
